Smoking not extinguished in bars, restaurants
Ten years ago, the Georgia Legislature passed a law prohibiting smoking in bars and restaurants. It was promoted as a way to improve “the health, comfort and environment” of Georgians. The law, still in effect, has some exemptions, including allowing smoking in an establishment if it prohibits entry to anyone under age 18. Despite the 2005 law, a recent study from Georgia State University found some surprising results on smoking. Researchers found that the percentage of Georgia restaurants and bars allowing smoking nearly doubled in the first six years after the law’s passage. (Ga Trend)

Poll: Georgia No. 5 state for business; Minnesota No. 1
Minnesota has replaced Georgia at No. 1 in CNBC’s annual poll ‘America’s Top States for Business.’ Atlanta Business Chronicle reported early Wednesday that Georgia has slipped to No. 5 in the rankings. The winner and rankings for all 50 states had not yet been released. (Ga Trend)

Wrigley to add 155 full-time employees
One-hundred-and-seventy-five “sweet” new jobs are coming to Georgia according to an announcement made Wednesday by Mars, Incorporated; 155 of them to Hall County, the remainder to Albany. Based in McLean, Virginia, and having over $33-billion in annual sales, Mars is the parent company of Wrigley, known worldwide for chewing gum, mints and other candy products. (Ga Trend)

Deal to pursue redesign of Sons of Confederate Veterans tag
Gov. Nathan Deal today said that he will seek a redesign of Georgia’s state-issued Sons of Confederate Veterans license plates, which is set on a Confederate battle flag background that covers the entire tag. “As I have said before, many interest groups in Georgia are able to express personal views on specialty plates, and I support the ability of these groups, including the Sons of Confederate Veterans, to express their views. I have tried to govern as a consensus builder, and I believe we can reach a resolution agreeable to all sides through a redesign of the plate.

Dixie Outfitters in Southeast Georgia gets a surge in sales as big retailers drop rebel flags States that use the Confederate battle flag on tags and state flags are considering removing them in the wake of the June 17 shooting deaths of nine worshipers at a Charleston S.C. church. At the same time, Amazon, Walmart, Sears and other retailers have said they will stop selling flags, which accused killer Dylann Roof displayed as he espoused his white supremacist views. Those announcements are boosting sales at Dixie Outfitters, a clothing manufacturer in Odum, Ga., that uses the battle flag in the company logo on T-shirts and other apparel.

Deal: National Beef to create 200 jobs in Colquitt County
Gov. Nathan Deal announced today that National Beef Packing Company, LLC, a leading beef processing and packing company will expand its operations in Moultrie, creating approximately 200 jobs and roughly $9 million into the expansion. “The growth of food processing in Georgia outpaces the national average,” said Deal. “Our state offers the right resources, including a diverse cluster of companies and an interconnected logistics framework, necessary to help National Beef better reach its growing market in the region. I look forward to witnessing its continued success in Colquitt County.” (Ga Trend)

JULY 4TH

Last summer, July 4th found me in downtown Bangkok suffering through sweltering heat. My wife, Kai, is originally from Thailand, so we vacation there about once a year visiting her extended family. I had been watching my calendar trying to figure out how I would celebrate our holiday 14,000 miles away from home. After all, King Rama IX, was born in Boston, and had started out his life as an American citizen. Surely there would be something of significance somewhere in the capital. But, as much as I searched for a glimpse of the American flag, none were to be seen. It was just another workday in a crowded city. I thought I would take a taxi over to the Joint US Military Advisory Group, Thailand, knowing I could get in and they had a bar where Americans would be gathered, but my wife did not seem too interested and she had other plans for me shopping in the countless stores, looking for that special bargain. I had all but given up hope of something American when I returned to the hotel to get out of my soaked clothes and freshen up before dinner. I hopped onto the small elevator and was joined by a young Asian girl somewhere around twelve. I greeted her with a smiling "Hello". And much to my astonishment she came back at me in very good English with a smiling "How are you"? "Where are you from"? I asked knowing that my hotel was usually filled with all sorts of people from different Asian countries. She giggled and told me, "Thailand of course, where are you from"? "I am from the United States". But, it did not register with her. Thinking quickly I came back with, "I am from America". She gasped. She looked at me and with lots of enthusiasm, eyes big, and told me, "I want to go to America"! "I hope you do, you will like it", I responded. And with that the doors opened and she disappeared down the hall. I thought to myself as the elevator continued up to my floor that she had probably just met her first American. And, whatever she had learned about our country she wanted to come and see it. With that quick exchange I became a representation to that young girl of everything that I am proud to be – an American.

Happy July 4th to all of you.

Due to concerns about cracking the iconic instrument, the Liberty Bell has not been rung since 1846. Instead, every year, to mark the Fourth of July, the 2,000-pound bell is tapped 13 times to signal for bells across the country to start ringing.

Pulling a hat out of a rabbit

It's tempting to do what's been done before, certain in the belief that if you do it, it'll be a little better and a little more popular, merely because you're the one doing it. In fact, though, that's unlikely. You'll care more, but it's unlikely the market will. Consider the alternative, which is choosing to turn the question upside down, to do it backwards, sideways, or in a significantly more generous or risky way. Remarkable often starts with the problem you set out to solve and the way you choose to solve it. Seth Godin-
