FROM THE PUBLISHER MEANINGS BEHIND CHRISTMAS LYRICS

I love holiday songs. The instruments. The lyrics. The artists. All of it. Well, most all of it. I could do without any songs from Mariah Carey or Alvin and the Chipmunks, but you get the idea. If you haven't seen the December issue of CITYVIEW magazine, be sure to check it out, as we share our 25 favorite Christmas songs as our cover story. I am sometimes baffled, though, at the lyrics in many of the classic holiday songs I cherish. Traditions from days gone by? Words we no longer use? Check these out.

Chestnuts roasting on an open fire. I'm not sure I even know what chestnuts are, much less how to roast them. Even so, I learned that chestnuts were synonymous with Christmas in America even before Nat King Cole's song hit the airwaves. They were one of the most popular ingredients in American dishes throughout the 18th and 19th centuries, as the eastern seaboard was covered in chestnut trees until a blight caused them to go almost extinct. For more than a century, chestnuts roasting over an open fire was the smell of Christmas. Needless to say, that tradition has ended.

A corncob pipes Corncob pipes were invented by the Tibbe family in Missouri and became popularized by Gen. Douglas MacArthur. I have never smoked one, or even seen one, but that old corncob pipe continues to be part of our pal Frosty The Snowman with his button nose and two eyes made out of coal.

On a one-horse open sleigh. Sleigh rides, although not so common today, still spark nostalgia. The ones we do tend to see now are large and majestic and beautiful, much like the horses that pull them. The old one-horse sleighs, though, appear to be small, tippy and bumpy, not ideal for dashing through the snow.

Bells on bobtail. Back in the day, bobbing a horse's tail involving cutting the tail or tying it back so it looked shorter. Shorter hair on a horse's tail was supposed to keep it from waving in the driver's face, which makes sense.

Meanwhile, those bells placed on bobtail jingled in the Christmas spirit.

Four calling birds. In the original published version of "The 12 Days of Christmas," it's "four colly birds" not "four calling birds." In England, at the time, "colly birds" was a name given to blackbirds, and what says Christmas like blackbirds?

And finally, a pudding made of pig. "Grandma Got Run Over by a Reindeer" may not be a beloved holiday classic for all, but it is well known. The reference to a pudding made of pig, though, throws me off. This is not the pudding that was peddled by Bill Cosby. No, this pudding is black pudding, a type of blood sausage.

Sometimes, it is better not to know the meaning and just jingle all the way!

Have a great week, and thanks for reading.

HISTORY

THE ISLAND BY MIKE FLINN

The land just north of Adel along Highway 169 has always been known as "The Island." It's 700 acres are surrounded on all sides by water — the north and east side from the original channel of the North Raccoon River and the west and south side by the mill slough. The mill slough was created when the upper dam was built, which changed the flow of the river to the slough in order to power a grist mill. The area is underlaid by deposits of sand and gravel that had been excavated for years.

A covered bridge, built prior to 1879, once spanned the mill slough on the north side of Adel. It was replaced, in 1915, by a concrete bridge which was then replaced by the present bridge.

On the north side of the island, on the old Highway 169 route, was a steel overhead beam bridge. It was removed when the route of 169 was moved east to its present location, but its pilings still stand at the end of what is now an industrial road.

Both branches of the river teemed with fish, and large traps were set with the entire community sharing in the catch. Species were catfish, northern walleye, bass, carp, crappie and even eels.

A strip of pasture on the island was rented to people in town who owned milk cows. Each morning, over a dozen cows were driven across the covered bridge to the pasture. Each evening, they were driven back to town to be milked. Frank Bradbury, a one-armed man, charged a small fee to drive them with his pony each day. If they didn't want to pay Frank's fee, they could drive their cow themselves.

The island was noted for the delicious watermelons, muskmelons and other fruits and vegetables the sandy soil produced. In the 1930s and 1940s, Nelson Eastman grew a variety of fine vegetables in his truck garden that were enjoyed by the people of Adel. Sometime in the 1950s, Hupp opened a market one mile north of Adel. He featured ham, bacon, lunchmeats and all sorts of fruits and vegetables. Watermelons, grown on his truck farm, were his specialty. The large dark green melons were kept fresh and cool in a stock tank. After the customer picked out his melon, Hupp would cut a three-cornered plug out of it for the customer to sample to be sure it was ripe.

The island is now home to Adel's Island Park. The park was established in 1967 and is a popular fishing and camping spot during the summer months. Soccer fields were added to the park in 1995. ■
