PROGRESS

Progress???

Sharing The Joy
Poetry By Cheryl Murph

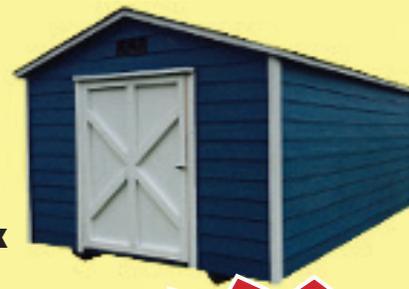

It never seems to amaze me at the changes taking place here in the USA alone. As the old days become less and less heard of I suppose after us baby boomers have passed, then all but the memories will be gone. Society has such a way of manipulating our young people to the point of having them believe everything is so much better if it is modern and new. Little children will never learn any different if their parents are believing it too. What is called progress today is whatever makes life easier, faster and of course doesn't take a genius to figure out. Even those of us from an earlier generation are being told if we will just try the new way, our grandchildren would be glad to show us what it's all about. I understand when my grandparents were born up until the time i was born, many, many changes came along. Yet everyone and everything still had a place of it's own. God, men, women, children and animals as well all had a certain role in life to play. No one was going to change our family's standards or morals. It did not matter if the President had nothing or he had something to say. God's law came first, daddy made a living, while mother stayed home, and us kids had rules to obey and chores to do. Our animals back then, stayed, played and survived outside because that was all they knew. Now in America, dads stay home, mamas work, technology raises children and a lot of our pet's have better lives than some people and everyone tries to make their own law. But most importantly when God was taken out of some of our churches, homes and schools the foundation our American Heritage was built on, began to fall. Instead of one nation under God we have become one nation under self. We are spoiled, we dance to our own song and somewhere between all the work and play we give God what little of us is left. It is so true if we don't stand for something we will fall for anything. I pray that all generations believe in Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. For it is only through him we can acknowledge what mans progress may bring.

Remember til our paths cross again, Philippians 4:4-10
