The Real World?
 Sharing The Joy
 Poetry By Cheryl Murph

In the real world,
 a boy goes after the most popular, and best looking girl in school.
 In the right world,
 a boy desires to know a good and respected girl because they are few.
 In the real world,
 a girl goes for the most popular and best looking football player on the team.
 In a right world,
 a young girl knows she has been blessed with a man who is never unfaithful, never cruel or mean.
 In the real world,
 there is always complaining and worrying about age, appearance and weight.
 In a right world,
 one knows God doesn't make junk, so on the inside and outside they know their great.
 In a real world,
 everyone loves technology and each new invention keeps society buying.
 In a right world,
 one expects less, invites a challenge and a desire of self worth that requires trying.
 In a real world,
 bigger is better, so daddy makes a list for Santa with lot's of wishes.
 In a right world,
 daddy makes a couple of sandwiches,
 grabs two rod-n-reels and takes his boy fishing.
 In a real world,
 time is always found for the things we really want to do.
 In a right world,
 time is priceless when spending it with those forgotten, by the ones they once knew.
 In a real world wouldn't it be nice if we could actually live "In a right world"?
 I suppose we could.
 If our most important priority was to forget the real world.

Remember til our paths cross again, Philippians 4:4-10
