Research Reveals Recycling Is Increasingly Popular

(NAPSI)—Here, for a change, is good news about the environment: Americans are recycling their food and beverage cartons more than ever and continue to look to brands to actively help drive the recycling of their products' packages, according to a new survey.

What The People Want

The national study commissioned by the Carton Council of North America showed that 61 percent of respondents report they always recycle their food and beverage cartons, up 11 percentage points from when the survey was last conducted two years ago. Nearly all—94 percent—think recycling is important and 74 percent believe recycling should be made a priority.

People also have high environmental expectations for the brands they buy. Consumers overwhelmingly expect food and beverage brands to be committed to recycling. More than nine out of 10 said brands should take an active role in helping to increase the recycling of packages. And 56 percent said their loyalty to a food or beverage brand is affected by the brand's engagement with environmental causes.

How To Tell Whether Something Is Recyclable

The survey showed that packaging remains the top source for determining recyclability, while friends and family as well as the news gained momentum. Nearly two-thirds of respondents said that if a package did not have a recycling symbol or language indicating the item is recyclable, they would assume it's not.

One help is that now food and beverage cartons can carry the standard "Please Recycle" logo. The ability to use the label is based on the mile-

Carton Recycling Continues to Climb

A new survey found that more Americans are recycling their food and beverage cartons.

stone that more than 60 percent of U.S. households have access to carton recycling, a threshold set by the Federal Trade Commission green guidelines for packaging.

However, just because a package doesn't have a recycling symbol, doesn't mean that it's not recyclable. To find out, consumers should call their local community or visit its website.

"The survey findings highlight that as more Americans have gained access to food and beverage carton recycling, awareness that cartons are recyclable has also increased," explained Jason Pelz, vice president of recycling projects for the Carton Council of North America and circular economy director for Tetra Pak. The Carton Council works to deliver long-term collaborative solutions to divert valuable cartons from the landfill.

Just Remember

*Sharing The Joy
Poetry By Cheryl Murph*

Everyday may not always be a good day.
The sun doesn't always shine and the sky may look a little gray.
Sickness may come and keep you from feeling your best,
or God may bring you to a certain place just to see if you will pass his test.
Just remember this too shall pass.
On a certain day your attitude may be lousy and your demeanor seem somewhat unkind.
You may be facing a mountain of decisions as confusion and frustration clouds your mind.
Just remember this too shall pass.
You may be at the lowest point in your life than you have ever been before.
Your burdens may be so heavy and you truly feel as if you can't take it no more.
Just remember this too shall pass.
We all face difficult times and hard times that in reality can almost seem mean.
It happens to everyone though often unseen.
I suppose it is one's loss of faith that convinces them they can no longer handle this life anymore.
Such a lie as this comes from Satan like never before.
There is no problem to big for God nor to small.
He waits earnestly on your call.
He gives us unconditional Love and a peace that will forever last.
Then in times of trials and temptations you will know, this too shall pass.

Remember til our paths cross again, Philippians 4:4-10

Boating Better With Quality Fuel
By Don Onken

(NAPSI)—I have spent many years of my life racing boats professionally and enjoying boats recreationally. My love for being out on the water has been passed down through my family, and it is truly a way of life for all of us. As the owner of the American Ethanol Mystic Powerboats, 51 foot Catamaran, I am always pushing to get every last ounce of performance out of the boat. There is a significant amount of highly technical work that goes into building, prepping, maintaining and driving a record-setting boat that frequently surpasses 200 mph out on the water in competition. Ironically, one often overlooked component of boat maintenance and performance is actually one of the simplest elements—the fuel.

Understanding Ethanol
We run our competition boat on a fuel blend that has a high concentration of ethanol, which is a renewable biofuel made from plants that reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Ethanol has higher octane than standard gasoline so it helps us gain horsepower and speed in the boat. It also burns cleaner and cooler, which is a smarter choice for our engines. And, since ethanol displaces toxic chemicals in gasoline that have been linked to groundwater contamination, cancer and smog, it's a choice we feel good about in protecting the waterways that are such an important part of our lives.

Saving Money
Ethanol certainly has a place within the boating world. It's an inexpensive source of octane that also promotes cleaner, more environmentally friendly boating, something anybody should be able to get behind. Ethanol-free gasoline is frequently sold near marinas at significantly higher costs than E10, and boaters should be aware that E10 is a choice that could save them money at the pump and be perfectly suited for their boat. Every major marine manufacturer—Kawasaki, Mercury Marine, OMC, Peauxcraft, Tigerhawk, Tracker, Honda, Yamaha and others—approves 10 percent ethanol blends in their marine engines.

Getting the Most From Your Boat
Boating is a way of life for many families other than my own. Whether you're racing competitively or just most boaters are at least familiar with the fuel. What some boaters may not know is that E10 is safe and approved for use in all marine engines, and has been warranted for use for nearly two decades. Meanwhile, E15 (made with 15 percent ethanol) is being increasingly offered by leading retailers across the U.S. because it allows them to offer higher-octane fuel at competitive prices—up to 10 cents per gallon less than E10. E15 is a great choice for anyone with a car model year 2001 and newer because it is higher octane than E10 at less cost, which is a clear benefit. However, E15 is currently not approved for use in marine engines, which is why fuel pumps are clearly labeled with the ethanol content of the fuel.
