The Gift

Sharing The Joy

Poetry By Cheryl Murph

Joey Baker was the new kid in town. When Joey's dad passed away he was only seven years old. Before then they lived in Detroit City where the winters are known for being very harsh and cold. Many changes had been made for the entire family in the last three years since Mr. Baker had passed away. For Joey now 10 and his sister Jenny only 7, knew how to maintain their household chores and do homework everyday. The other kids really liked Joey but found it to be strange that he wore a striped toboggan everywhere he would go. Even in the spring and summer he had on his toboggan and as for as everyone else Joey loving his toboggan was all they needed to know. Joey hung with all the guys in the neighborhood and he learned fast that Ben was the boss that told all the others what to do. Not only was he bossy but he was also the greatest bully in school. As the months passed, December had arrived and it was pretty cold. It was on a Saturday morning, that Ben's mother had him ride his bike to the local grocery store. An errand he had ran for her a hundred times before. Just so happened about the time Ben went to cross the road a teenage boy came around the curve way to fast according to what others had told. Struck by a car Ben now laid helpless in a hospital bed. Paralyzed from his waist down at only 11 years old. Joey wanted so badly to do something for his friend. So the decision he was about to make would be one of the biggest sacrifices he had ever made, especially it being for the bully Ben. He carefully wrapped Ben's gift with Spiderman paper all on his own. He walked to the hospital and when giving Ben his gift, Ben told Joey he believed he had rather open his gift when he was all alone. After Joeys visit, Ben opened his gift and he pulled from the small box the worn striped toboggan Joey loved so dear. It was a present given to Joey by his dad the last Christmas he was here. It wasn't the price of the toboggan, but the sacrifice Joey made that day. Of course it would have been much easier to have bought a gift than to give something he loved with all his heart away. Why anyone would show such compassion for him, especially after his bully ways, was something he would have plenty of time to figure out. As time passed Ben realized what a gift of true Love was all about. Us being more like Ben, has one who loves us so much that he sacrificed his own life so we may live. What greater gift could anyone give? So remember if given a gift and it's not all pretty and new, the person giving is trying to say, just how much they care about you!

Remember til our paths cross again, Philipians 4:4-10
