To Raise Creative Kids, Let Them Play

(NAPSI)—Fostering a child's courage to express creativity is perhaps one of the most important goals that parents can set for themselves.

Understanding Creativity

Often, when people think of creativity, they think of the arts, but it starts with play early in life and leads to other things as children grow. It's through play that children begin to develop their creative muscles, whether with blocks, dolls or action figures. Beyond play, kids may find creativity in the way they play sports, clean their room, prepare their food or do their school-work.

According to experts at The Genius of Play™, a national movement to raise awareness about play's critical role in child development and encourage more play in children's lives, creativity can help build confidence, flexibility, individuality and mental agility, and even contribute to better physical health.

Expert Advice

Dr. Erik Fisher, Ph.D. and The Genius of Play expert, believes the best way to foster children's creativity is to encourage them to try things and not feel afraid to fail. Failure itself is an amazing learning experience as it helps children develop tenacity and perseverance, which are some of the most important skills they'll need later in life. At the same time, parents should be aware of their own emotions, attitudes and beliefs and be willing to create with their child. Many times, parents want their kids to "fit in" and don't realize they're stifling creativity.

To help ensure that creativity is part of your child's play routine, Dr. Fisher suggests:

- Don't focus on just the arts. Play has a key role in helping develop children's creative muscles. As children develop creativity in one area, it often extends to other areas.

- Help your kids stretch their creativity muscles and yours by experimenting with many different kinds of toys and playful activities. Trying new things lets kids discover what they like and explore their own talents.

- Observe and appreciate your children's uniqueness and celebrate how they do things differently.

- There's no better way to dry up creativity than with criticism. Try to find constructive ways to give feedback and seek ways to be positive.

- Help your child see failure through play as a learning experience, not a time to quit.

Choices

Sharing The Joy
 Poetry By Cheryl Murph

Sometimes choices can be very easy for us, while at times some can be very difficult. Some bring happiness, success and prosperity. While some bring regrets, depression and hurt. When we become at the age of accountability God gives us all a "self will". Which for most, we know not to rob a bank, steal another's car or get mad enough to kill! For myself, choices were not always thought out. Much less did I take the time to pray. All those rational choices I made came with the same old negative results day after day. My shoulders carried a whole bucket full of regrets that came from the careless choices I often made. Even now, some continue to take me down that long hard road that many years ago, I paved. But these last few years have been much better I must say. Since I finally stepped back and got out of God's way. To all those who read this, be wise in your "choices" weather you are young or growing old. For it is the todays that create the chapters of your life, but it is not until tomorrow the pages unfold.

Remember til our paths cross again, Philippians 4:4-10 To read more of Cheryl's work find her on Facebook. If you would like to have Cheryl write a special poem for your loved one, contact her at lulumoon1961@yahoo.com
