Timmy

Sharing The Joy
 Poetry By Cheryl Murph

Timmy grew up in an upper middle class family with two sisters and a wonderful mom and dad. His childhood was anything but bad. It wasn't until his senior year that his parents noticed he was skipping school and staying in bed. They had no idea of the troubles that lie ahead. Timmy started hanging out with the wrong crowd. He started raising cane and getting high. The more drugs he tried the less school meant to him and his motivation began to die. As the alcohol and pot became less affecting he moved on up to the hard stuff. He had finally found something he loved and he couldn't get enough. Before to long Heroin was his best friend. His body and mind both started to shut down and Timmy was in the worst shape he had ever been. He sold everything he could just to get a fix for that one day. He quit school, left home and eventually became a dealer. He not only loved the drug but it provided great pay. At 25 years old he was busted and sent to jail. No friends, no drugs and not even his parents would pay his bail. For years he will be contained to his new home in a cell. I wonder if it was all worth it when he looks back on his life? By the time he is out he will be too old to have kids and a wife. Timmy could have taken an overdose and easily died. I recall his mother saying at least he will be safe and off drugs, through the tears she cried.

Remember til our paths cross again, Philippians 4:4-10
