Some things in this world just don't mix. I remember as a child drinking Castor Oil and Orange Juice for a quick fix.

The oil and juice would separate and if you could stand to get past the oil the juice was a piece of cake.

One of those old time remedies that some folks may actually still take. As people we also can invite other people into our lives that we can not mix with no matter how hard we try.

It stirs up an emotional turmoil that brings forth bitterness, and often forms a chain of never ending manipulation and lies. Three days can be wonderful but the next four days of fussing and arguing destroy those few days of peace and getting along. It is amazing how our personalities can switch in the blink of an eye like I've often heard it written in a country song. Some personalities when mixing together can become as toxic as pouring gas on the fire.

Could it be where one is weak the need to control fills their own selfish desires?

The toxins between two people can be so draining that it's physical side effects began to show.

Weather it be you or the other, someone needs to go. This toxic mixture can destroy a person and in some cases it has lead to death.

A cyclone of emotions that can explode like a mobile home doused in Crystal Meth.

A toxic relationship can quickly turn into dangerous situation. Even if a toxic relationship isn't severe it still can only lead to a world of misery with a lifetime of complications.

When such toxic is between two people it creates a ripple effect that poisons family members and so many others.

We can become so amunned to it that we convince ourselves it is Love and never expect more from one another.
